

Going Green: Environmental Stewardship for Preservation and Profit

Wondering how you can affordably and easily incorporate “green” practices into your everyday life? Come out to our historic Carriage House to hear a variety of perspectives on local “green” issues from renowned community leaders and environmental advocates. Topics will include an assortment of subjects including: “green” lawn care, protection of local wildlife, historical environmental issues and the true characteristics of eco-living. Visitors will be treated to a natural history tour of Cliveden’s historic 6 acre property, a behind-the-scenes look at our climate control project in the Chew House, as well as a bus trip to two local farming cooperatives. Join us at Cliveden for a memorable and productive discussion on local environmental topics!

Cliveden is a National Trust Historic Site located in the Germantown neighborhood of Philadelphia. Going Green: Environmental Stewardship for Preservation and Profit continues the National Trust’s commitment toward sustainability at historic sites. Cliveden’s current climate control project highlights the National Trust’s four Principles of Sustainable Stewardship: Reuse existing and older buildings; Reinvest in older and historic communities, Retrofit existing buildings for energy efficiency, and Respect historic fabric.

Special thanks to Randall Miller for making this great forum possible.
